

Treatment for the Flu and Negative Consequences and the Law of God

A recent article reported the finding by some in the medical profession that treatment for the flu could actually be making the flu worse. Every year, the winter months bring flu season. For weeks, we hear about the production and availability of the new flu vaccine followed by stories of outbreaks of the flu. One of the more recent developments in medicine has been the advent of pharmaceuticals that battle the flu after a person has already fallen ill to the virus. In the past, we would run to the drugstore and load up on various over the counter flu remedies that really only addressed some of the symptoms. Now, there are drugs that actually reduce the severity and the duration of the illness, allowing people to get back to school or work much quicker than a decade ago. However, this quick recovery from the symptoms also means that individuals feel well enough to return to normal activities while still contagious. This negative consequence has some in the medical world wondering whether the treatment actually makes the flu season worse. While helping the individual that is already sick, the number of exposures for the community at large grows rapidly. This is not to suggest that treatment should be suppressed. The prescriptions that provide legitimate relief from this serious illness should and must be deployed. In some cases, it may even preserve a person's life. The desire of the researchers is to provide more education as to the extended contagious period for the patient, even when they are feeling better. We have been studying the book of Romans on Sunday evenings. A fundamental principle of the book is that we are justified before God on the bases of faith in the person and work of Jesus Christ. When we believe in Christ, God treats us as if we are righteous. For some during Paul's day, the pull of legalism caused them to be skeptical. They might say, "Why did God give us the Law?" The law of God functions in several beneficial ways in our lives. However, the one thing the law cannot do is make us righteous before God. Just like the treatment for the flu does not remove the flu from us, but there are great benefits of taking the drug. In the same way, the law has great benefits but it will never remove the need for the work of Christ and the individual's need for faith in Him. There are several benefits to the law. First, according to Romans and Galatians, the law identifies our need for grace. We cannot fulfill the law. We cannot keep the requirements of the law. We find that perfect fulfillment of the law is necessary but impossible. We cannot be righteous, or just, before a holy God on the basis of our ability to meet His perfect demands. Our failure drives us to His solution; we are justified on the basis of faith in Christ Jesus. Second, the law provides us insight into the heart of God. What God says about our world, our culture, our encounter with cultures that do not honor Him, our history and the history of all others. By studying the law of God, meaning the Bible as a whole, we get to know God's priorities for our lives. Third, the law provides for believers a means to love God. We cannot be right before God based on our actions. We cannot ever do enough to justify ourselves before Him. However, we can love Him. The way we love Him is to love His law and to submit ourselves to His law. Jesus said it this way to His disciples, "This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. Greater love has no one than this, that one lay down his life for his friends. You are My friends if you do what I command you." John 15:12-14

Just as Tamiflu does not cure a person instantly of the flu, the law cannot make us right before God. Just as Tamiflu, despite the positive intentions of the developers, can actually cause certain behaviors that make flu season worse, so can those who rely upon the law for more than it was intended. The law is good, but we are not. The law of God does what it is intended to do, drive us to God, explain His character and provide us with clear instruction on how we can love God. In the hands of the wrong person with the wrong motives, the law can be misused in ways that are detrimental to the individual and the community of the church.

We are committed to studying and applying the Bible. We do not do this to make ourselves righteous before God. We are inadequate to accomplish such an impossible task. We are righteous before God on the basis of His grace through faith in Christ. Just as a doctor who prescribes Tamiflu for a patient gives that patient a word of caution about still being contagious, we prescribe the study of God's Word with a word of caution about still needing grace. As Paul says, "For by grace you have been saved through faith and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Not as a result of works so that no one may boast." Ephesians 2:9-10
